Hello All,

I am truly stunned that Ora's plans are still being considered and from what I am gathering might be a done deal.

If this is the case, shame on you for not protecting an extraordinary resource and instead viewing this transaction through the lens of development. The world we live in sits in a precarious balance for life on this planet and it is up to us to do our part in turning around what looks to be a very bad future ahead.

It is incredibly short sighted and not much financial gain for Ipswich in a move that sacrifices that which is precious in this world these days. It is our responsibility to steward these natural resources which are rarer to find and central to the overall balance of our planet and the health of the individual and the community. Once it is turned over for development, that's it..It's gone. Do not be so short-sighted or cavalier with what we have carefully preserved and need to continue to protect.

Sincerely,

Nonie Brady
